On the Campus

IN this article we hope to integrate what follows in our annual, for, although pictures and names are illuminating and expressive, they are at best disjointed. It is true, the students here can bind them together from their own experiences, but we propose for our annual to have a universal rather than a mere college appeal; the questions of mothers and fathers rising from their deep interest, the numberless queries of relatives about "the school Mary goes to," the mild interest of summer callers, the eager inquiries of prospective students may perhaps find a general answer in this article, which will lightly touch the surface of the life and institutions of our college.

Dr. William Waugh Smith was both originator and founder of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, for not only did he visualize an institution that would open a new realm of education to the women of the South, but realized in his own lifetime the vision.

Founder. He must have been forced to keep his eyes straight fixed on his ideal in order to have seen in the plain little building that extended on one side to where our reading-room is now and on the other to the side porch by the literary society hall the germ of a successful college. Dr. Smith realized that an institution, like all vital things, like religion, like a plant, like man, must grow from a living organism within.

This living organism in his college was student government in which each individual obtains highest liberty by obeying laws for the common good. Its

Student Government. code of ethics is a sealed book the spirit of which exists in the air but cannot be resolved into definition. This student government is made practical by the Executive Board and the Student Committee, a circle within a circle. The Executive Board with the student body president at its head is comprised of the four house presidents, the chairman of censorship committee, the secretary and treasurer of the Student Committee. This inner circle first receives and assimilates matters of importance and prepares them for presentation before the Student Committee, which body is made up of twenty seniors, ten juniors, five sophomores, three freshmen, two irregulars and one representative from the day students chosen by their respective classes. A business meeting is held every month when reports are made on the order in the halls, on the welfare of all branches of government, and proposed amendments and rules discussed. These meetings are tedious and wrangling at times, but always fire eloquence, especially in the seniors, who feel no more experienced minds, listening with mild tolerance to their cherished ideas. It was refreshing to find last year one subject on which every voter nodded in unison, that of dancing in college. But when every prospect was pleasing, only man was disagreeable, and the hand that had taught the child to walk alone checked it abruptly when it started walking with a glide. There also rests upon the Student Committee the serious function of meting out justice to those who violate the higher laws of the college society. At such times the responsibility rests like a leaden weight on mind and heart of those who must make what is perhaps their first decision to affect the life of another. The decision of the undergraduate tribunal is usually conclusive, although the faculty stands as a higher court of appeal. The foundations of this judicial department is the honor system, the heart of our college, upon which rests the deepest hope of its future.

"Ille terrarum mihi præter omnis angulus ridet."

The smile of Horace's Italy is no sunnier than that corner of Virginia where Randolph-Macon rears her

Topography. tall buildings. To stand at the entrance gate and look at the long buildings stretched out in a line to face a broad campus, their towers outlined against the sky like cathedral spires ever pointing upward, brings a surge of emotion enriched by memories that people the scene. Yet her beauty does not exert its spell only on those who hold a key to her inner wealth; every passing visitor remarks on the dignity of the dull red, ivy-covered walls and on the tree-lined walk that leads to the entrance. Smith Hall is placed directly in the center of the campus, the Mother Hall, to whose kindly roof all roads lead. East and West Halls stand on either side like right and left hands joined to the arms made by the corridors. They are alike in their dignified Gothic columns and broad white steps, yet widely different in character: West—noisy, sometimes called rowdy; East—quiet, sometimes termed slow. New Hall stands aloof and disjointed to the right of West, boasting her walls are whiter and her porcelain uncracked, but there, too, feet are wetter on rainy days from cross-campus tramping.

A graveled pathway leads from the side of West down a slope past the gymnasium and on through "the Pines," which in spring looks like one of Spencer's sylvan glades and in winter is a white close where an erl king might live. The eight fraternity houses stand in a row along this pathway. They are attractive little houses built for the most part in bungalow style, each consisting of a long living-room, a dining-room, a kitchen and a few secret corners. An open fire, a shaded lamp and a victrola, too, seem to be considered necessary touches to their coziness. The gymnasium is a substantial brick building well equipped for the development of weak legs and arms; indeed, its smooth floor sees, though the observation must be close, the development of grace in the æsthetic dancing classes held every week. In the basement are the showers and a swimming pool on the subject of whose charms the countless swimming fiends can bore their friends for hours. On the opposite side of the graveled path the tennis courts extend down to the athletic field, where the Thanksgiving basket-ball match is played and where public interest turns eagerly on field day. Both under the fence around this field and from the graveled walk the paths are well worn that lead to a building which, although it may not be recognized in a classic survey of the college grounds, looms too large in the student's topography to be passed without a word. This is Whileaway Inn, better known as Miss Ellis's, where dishes are served that rival mother's and bills sent home that shrivel father. Following the boardwalk from Miss Ellis's around the side of New Hall brings the front campus in view again, a broad green expanse broken by winding walks, a picturesque summer-house and the astronomical observatory. In the spring it glows with flowers, making on the first day of May a perfect bower for the Queen and her maids.

In this setting moves the life of the institution. The term college life is a most misused one, calling up, as it does, in the mind of some only pictures of girls in gay-colored kimonos cooking fudge, or groups in lettered sweaters getting harmony on "Mandalay." What a small part such scenes play in the real life! The thought often occurs that college life is a whole existence in miniature; in the four years there is a youth, a prime, an end. The freshman year is full of excitement and opportunities, the sophomore and junior years the realization of opportunities grasped, the senior year a time of looking back in retrospect, conning the mistakes and counting the gain while grasping a vision of the new fields presently to be entered. As has often been said, college is no preparation for life; it is life itself. There is a steady, normal current of daily existence that underlies all the pleasures and excitement of college, so well ordered as to make possible the accomplishment of twice as much as in a home day. The words "atmosphere" and

Life of the Institution.

HELIANTHUS

"spirit" are hackneyed by frequent occurrence in the parlance of college lecturers, but they must be used here to speak of our atmosphere of study. For we have such an atmosphere in spite of the criticism sometimes given even by the friends of the college of a certain "high school spirit" which, in this application, means an unordered life holding study secondary to the excitement the moment offers. If this were true, Randolph-Macon would not have grown so; Phi Beta Kappa has accepted our standard of scholarship and this year will see a chapter installed here. There is a criticism, too, of our lack of literary atmosphere which is indeed better founded, for the virtues of youth that our college possesses, responsiveness, energy, enthusiasm, are accompanied by a youthful tendency to leave unappreciated the golden storehouse of literature and thought open to us more widely now perhaps than it will be again in a lifetime.

The steady routine just mentioned has little to fear here from the "evils of Athleticism," so often the case in men's colleges. Not that there is any lack of enthusiasm over basket-ball or field day; a spectator at Athletics. our Thanksgiving game sees a perfect example of a tense mob when a yell coming from six hundred throats seems to come from one, but the season lasts only through November, and our basket-ball heroines have to reinforce their prowess with skill in other things to keep their laurels fresh all year. We have no intercollegiate athletics; the contests are between the four classes, and class spirit, always high, runs then to its zenith. This fall a new contestant entered the field and threw down the challenging gauntlet, the faculty squad, the members of which demonstrated remarkable activity if but little action. Their advance was extraordinary, they challenged first the Junior Squad, and immediately afterward the all-star team; the record of the scores of both games has been carefully misplaced. The all-star team mentioned above is the flower of all four teams, since the members are chosen on account of both individual and team work. After Thanksgiving, athletics lie dormant—except for gymnasium classes—until the spring term, when enthusiasm and class rivalry run high again on field day; then those who can run, jump, vault, etc., come into a large share of popular attention.

Every phase of college life at Randolph-Macon condenses itself into an organization; whether, as some assert, the result is mechanical over-organization, it is not the purpose of this article to argue. The Young

Organizations. Women's Christian Association makes it her care that students do not carelessly relegate their religious life to a low place among their interests. Through this organization world-wide causes of charity, big relief movements, and the mission field find a voice to reach the student body; in its committees the students find a field of unselfish activity. That it is only a spoke in a big machine and consequently lifeless and mechanical is the criticism only of those who stand aside and look at it sideways. There are two literary societies, the Franklin and Jefferson. Before so many organizations crowded into the student life these societies were the organs of class spirit and social life. These functions have been taken from them, and theirs now is the struggle to keep a place among the more material activities for the cultural life of the college. The lack of general interest is discouraging, but the earnest members can realize that the literary element they keep alive is a big force in making that to-morrow when Randolph-Macon will be an ideal institution.

To keep abreast the times the college has a suffrage club, not militant yet, only quietly determined and sitting confidently on the beach until the rising tide comes in. With the moral and mental life of the students well cared for, the Athletic Association makes the physical side its chief interest.

Every college has its castle in Spain, so Randolph-Macon has its Student Building; but with the unselfish enthusiasm of the chairmen of that committee who have worked faithfully with no hope of enjoying the attainment themselves and the desire of the whole student body turned to that one goal, it will not be long in Spain, but here on the campus. Its big auditorium will hold both students and townspeople at once, and every class and organization will have its private office.

The broadest classification among the social organizations are the nine fraternities. They include among their number approximately one-fourth of the student body. They are preëminently groups that offer to their members friendship bound fast by common interests and experiences, but they profess not to exist for the purpose of friendship alone, but to give to each girl the opportunity of losing her individual self in working for the common good of the fraternity; this "common good" is a high reputation among all those connected with the college. Whether fraternities are undemocratic or not is a question that is again not in accord with the purpose of this article to discuss; that here they strive not to be, is apparent to every one. There is very little mysticism about fraternities at the present day. Goating, skeletons, clanking of chains, and ghostly ceremonies are becoming less and less a part of their organism, and, as they move farther away from secrecy, they more and more identify themselves with social movements of the day.

*Fraternities
and Secret Societies.*

HELIANTHUS

The element of mystery is too dear to the human heart, especially the school girl heart, to be discarded entirely, and it is guarded and expressed in the secret societies that are woven within the fraternities. On certain days in the week members of these select orders appear in white, if the laundry does not fail them, decorated with a ribbon badge of the color dear to their order. The Am Sams alone have no special day in the week for appearing in color, but make up for the somber-toned past on St. Patrick's Day. These societies have their purpose in college life in serving as a never-failing stimulus to public interest, furnishing the fascinating unmentionable that offers many opportunities for public jokes, and many pitfalls for green Freshmen. What is the inspiration they give to their members, what their real raison d'être is a profound secret shrouded in an impenetrable veil that the hands of the irreverent may not tear aside.

To offset this obscurity in our midst are the publications whose aim it is to leave nothing unportrayed in our college world. The Sun Dial is published weekly, and becomes as indispensable as Father's morning Post. The Tattler, published monthly, represents the literary talent of the students, and through it Randolph-Macon is known to other colleges. The HELIANTHUS is an annual, endeavoring to reveal something of the spirit of a college where life is pleasant and inspiring; where knowledge is a chief end, yet gives place by her side to other aims that are likewise noble and high.

Respite

Throw back your head and let the soft night wind
Slide over your throat; come, leave the path and feel
The grass beneath your feet. Back there are lights;
Here—just the stars; there—girls bent over books.
All that will soon be over—I'm not sorry.
And yet, I can't be glad that it's to end.
These nights beneath the stars, and talks with you,
They make the world seem larger, better, fuller.
It's friends like you, and wonder-nights like this
That make the college years the best of all.
They stand so still and dark against the sky—
Those walls and towers we have learned to love.
Will we be missed? Perhaps so—just a little.
But there'll be others there to take our place.
Oh, I can't think that it must end so soon!
I know now why men speak of Alma Mater.
I feel as though she were a strong, kind friend,
Who took my hand, and led me toward a world
Undreamed of in those far-off early days;
A noble world—a world of men and women
Living unselfishly—a world of books—
A world of beauty. Now, she drops my hand,
And I must try to find the path myself.
Throw back your head and let the soft night wind
Slide over your throat.

JUNIORS

Even she's born, Even she's bred with an even and a level head. For it takes a level head to lead the Juniors and assist the Freshmen as ably and with as much composure as Juliette does it.

The River and the Dew

Dewdrops on the spider-web,
Woven on a willow tree
Near the river's edge,
Glisten through the blue-grey mist
In labyrinthine iridescence.
Throwing back the green and silver sheen
Of the leaves around them,
And the orange glow of the sunrise,
Till the tree, aquiver from the shiver
Of the coolness of the dawn,
Shakes them in the mud-green water,
And they are lost
In opaqueness.

The Randolph-Macon Spirit

SCENE: The Institution

A STUDENT

A VISITOR

THE STUDENT: Would you like to see our college, sir?

THE VISITOR (bowing): Thank you, if I may with impunity
Solve a phenomenon of your community.

STUDENT: A place you prefer that I should show?

VISITOR: Men should want little here below,
But my mind's in doubt and I must clear it;
I've heard so much that I must perceive
The Randolph-Macon Spirit.

STUDENT (at loss): Well, it seems that's a hard thing to grab,
But I guess it's preserved in biology lab.
No! in the chapel—I recollect now—
I've heard it declaimed—

VISITOR: Oh, yes, it's much famed.

STUDENT (suggestively): Dr. Lipscomb can praise—and his looks much endear it—
The deepening influence of the classical spirit.

VISITOR: Yet I can't think it's the one.

STUDENT: Miss Louise can run slides till the young night depart,
Portraying the all-glorious spirit of art.

VISITOR: No, this spirit doesn't run.

STUDENT: Then Mr. Davis should have it in his finger-play,
Though his hymns don't run out in a spirited way.

VISITOR (shaking his head): But—

STUDENT: Oh, I have it—from Dr. Webb's morning oration—
It's that hearty spirit of coöperation.

VISITOR: Wrong again! It must be a freak—
This spirit I seek.

CELIANTUS

STUDENT (clapping her hands): Spirit in the plural number,
I'm no longer at loss;
For all spirits meet together
In our—Thanksgiving sauce!

VISITOR (a broad smile): Yes, yes, is that so, indeed? (Holding out a card.)
Have this card from me.

STUDENT (reading it): You? A trustee!

VISITOR: A Methodist one. Expect me back if I'm living,
Not in spirit, remember—in flesh—next Thanksgiving.

FLOSSIE (going to town): "Honey, have you got fifty cents around anywhere?"

ROOMMATE: "No; I've stopped keeping money in the room."

FLOSSIE: "Economizing?"

ROOMMATE: "Not exactly. I just want to break you of the habit of spending so much."

WHAT MAKES COLLEGE WORTH WHILE?

Perhaps at this season of the year, with exams still fresher in our memories than the lessons for to-day, it is difficult to detect the worth-while aspect of college life. But, reader, pause, reflect, consider: Your next-door neighbor flunked three more exams than you did, the bath water is now heated once a week, the hedge around the sun dial is at the present time $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches taller than the surrounding grass, you were seized with an attack of smallpox the day before Dollar Day, you can now offer to your week-end guests string-beans and hominy served in courses at 6:00 o'clock on Saturday evening, there are faint hopes of your granddaughters being able to climb the "curlies" of the Student Building, unusual musical advantages are offered in the way of victrolas, ukuleles, etc., to make your study period less dull—oh, but we grow weary of further enumeration. Surely college is a really worth-while place after all.

LOCAL COLOR

The S. T. A. B.'s had Open House to the faculty and students on Friday afternoon.

Miss Ima Priss, Miss Day bu Tante, Miss M. T. Head, and Miss Floss More, of Sweet Briar, spent the week-end with friends in college.

Mr. Ayers conducted a party of his leading pupils to the Isis on Wednesday evening to witness "Ten Nights in a Barroom," or "The Effects of Liquor on the Young."

Dr. Laubscher went to Petersburg, Va., last Saturday on business.

Eppi Leptic is in bed with fits.

Consider the onion, thou slug-gard, it is strong;
Yet it gives away its last scent,
and
Consequently lands in the soup.

MR. BOAR SPEAKS IN CHAPEL

Saturday night we had the wonderful opportunity of hearing Mr. A. Boar, Ph. D., and "household word." He gave a very original discourse on "When the Budding Womanhood Before Me Bursts Into Glorious Bloom." He spoke of the sea of bright faces that he looked into, like roses steeped in dew. Like poppies steeped in sleep would also have been a good simile. He told us that the world needed us and we must hasten out to build up the sunny Southland. As climax to his lecture he showed us a lantern slide of the ruins of the Hellespont, and quoted with pathos:

"Standing with reluctant feet
Where the brook and river meet."

There was not an open eye in the house. Every one was delighted except Dr. Webb, who frowned severely during the whole lecture.

Black

Some bold artist has taken his brush,
And there in the sun's golden track
Has stained the harmonious, roseate glow
With great gloomy streakings of black.

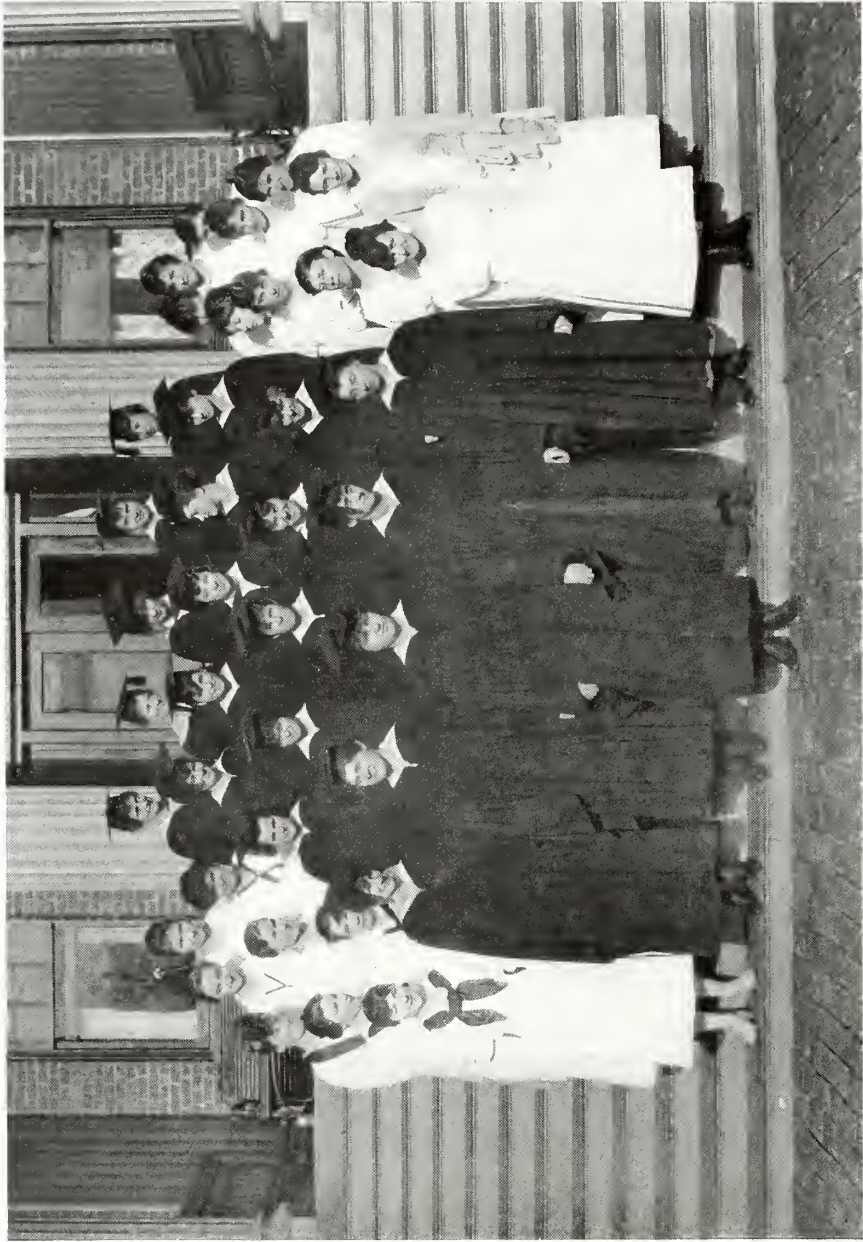

My bold guardian angel has taken his brush,
And there in the whiteness within
Has stained my unblemished, immaculate soul
With great gloomy streakings of sin.

But the black with the bright makes the wonderful whole,
The perfect result to insure.
I thank Thee, O God, for the sin of my soul,
That but renders my virtues more pure.

A Touch of Realism

DEAR MOTHER :

You say my letters are too general and not full enough of detail of my daily life. In this one I am going to reform.

I woke up this morning when the breakfast bell rang, made a lot of strange noises in hopes my roommate would wake up and shut the windows, but she didn't, of course. Then, by using the method of condensation, learned in writing English briefs, I got dressed, down the steps and was at my place, eating corn flakes and anticipating hash, within five minutes. The style of my hairdress at this morning meal was too intricate to describe. After breakfast I got up my laundry and read over my Latin at the same time. My roommate got up, saying she hadn't been able to sleep since four o'clock, because the radiator beat an Indian war-dance piece inside its pipe, and my suspicions that she was awake at the time the windows needed pulling down were confirmed.

Then I went to chapel. Chapel is a very interesting place, displaying as it does a mass of humanity in a subdued phase; the time of the hymns is subdued, the faculty is subdued, everything but the coughing and Dr. Crooks's tenor. I had three classes, and carried a different temperature in each. In one I had a fever. The professor called on me to read French and expected me to get the meaning of the play at the same time. But when I pronounce French, I pronounce it; when I translate, I translate, but never the two together; and so when I turned over two pages by mistake in place of one, I read right on without realizing it. Everybody started laughing, and I, thinking I must have reached an amusing part in the text, smiled appreciatively and continued to read. An uproar followed, during which the teacher had to stop me and explain. I tried to faint, but the blood all rushed to my head instead of leaving it. I felt I came off victorious since I didn't get called on.

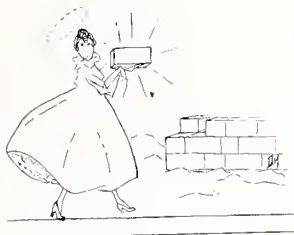

At dinner we had fish and everybody's spirits were low; the girl on one side of me prophesied I would die from drinking milk with fish, and the one on the other side said she thought she saw me swallow a bone. After dinner I had to go to chemistry lab, where I had another mishap. I read the direction in the manual for the student to "put substance in a mattress and heat it," and so I looked through my drawer and picked out a piece of wire netting as the thing that looked most like an ordinary mattress. When I put it over the flame it burnt right up, and I was told, while the class looked on breathlessly, that it was by no means a mattress.

After lab I had a fine time skating. Supper, too, was the brightest meal of the day. Potato chips and chocolate made everybody have a keen sense of humor. I spent the night study hour in the library, where all is light and laughter. It is time for light bell now. My roommate is getting out her five blankets and her footwarmers, and the radiator is getting up air for its nightly frolic.

This is a sample, Mother, of what college life is, stripped of the glamour, but bright in spots just the same.

Your affectionate daughter,

KATHERINE.

LOOKING FORWARD

"When I am grown to man's estate
 I shall be very proud and great,
 And tell the other girls and boys
 Not to meddle with my toys."

We feel about our Students' Building very much as do children about the playhouse that they have long desired to have all their own out in the yard. It has been six years now since this desire was expressed by the students of Randolph-Macon and, as the hope of its fulfillment has been made substantial by a growing fund, the joy and enthusiasm of the undertaking grows keener. What were vague, misty outlines of room for us and our activities have taken the form of auditorium, whose seating capacity needs not to be pieced out by chairs commandeered from the students' rooms; of assembly hall, whose spaciousness and adaptability will be equal to the whimsical entertainments of the years to come; of offices for our publications, our Student Committee, our Young Women's Christian Association, offices that will dare to take on a proprietary air. Our imaginations lend an encouraging glow to our recurring efforts. Fearless and unapologetic, we launch our money-making schemes, whether to be effected by sandwiches, lectures, or excursions. Meanwhile we try as cheerfully as possible to arrange our non-academic selves according to the law that two objects can not occupy the same space at the same time. So real seems the Students' Building that already we begrudge a new curtain, a chair that may not match; wall burlap that will not be transferable when we move into the building so soon to be.

And the fund grows—a few more birthdays and it will have attained unto the $60,000 estate. What with the $25,000, yet to be secured, reduced this year by $1,500 through the efforts of the students alone, friends and loyal alumnae doing their share, is the time very far off when we shall begin to build with bricks and mortar?

The Tragedy of an Evoluted Fire Chief

At first she placed a shoe box every night beneath her bed
To hold her bedroom slippers and the towel for her head;
Her bathrobe on a chair nearby and every sense alert;
She jumped in fear and poked her roommate's spare ribs till they hurt,
And dragged her to the corridor before the final clang—
This same nocturnal antic every time the fire-bell rang.

Another year 'twas taken as an all-consuming joke;
To pass a "fussed" professor was the necessary stroke
To throw her in hysterics, as the curlers on her hair,
Refracted by the campus lights, gave him a dazzled stare;
A string of call-downs soon became the most expected thing,
But, giggling, she was on the job at every fire-drill's ring.

Her Junior year in College she became a vital part
Of the complicated system, and no march could ever start
Without a private conference with the the Fire Chief in her room;
Then, stationed at the "curlies," with a mien of threatening gloom,
She scrawled down names while dragging those without their coats aside,
And won a "rep" for dignity that few could override.

And then, alas! her crowning year, appointed Chief, she fled
(A chafing-dish exploded and the poor dear lost her head)
Into the bosom of the flames, trapped by a fastened door;
They dragged her out a circumstance of what she was before.
She raised her eyes appealingly, a final earthly truce,
And, gazing on those filing by, breathed forth, "Oh, what's the use?"

SNOW—BIRD'S-EYE VIEW

CELESTIALS

MOST PROMINENT

LAURA WOOD

A head to rule our minds;
A way to win our hearts.

MOST POPULAR

JULIA PLUMMER EGGLESTON

Should she love all those who love her,
Her love must need be infinite.

CELLANUS

BEST ALL-ROUND

HELEN HARDY

"Jack of all trades"—shall we say?
No—master of them all!

MOST DEPENDABLE

CONSTANCE SMITH

Oh, for a tongue worthy to praise
Her virtues rare thru endless days.

CELLANUS

MOST BRILLIANT

ELIZABETH L. MOORE

From out the head of Jupiter
Minerva sprang of yore;
But out of Randolph-Macon
There came a little Moore.

MOST ORIGINAL

AUGUSTA STACY

Some girls for beauty win renown,
And for athletics, too;
But Gus got hers for thinking things
Original and new.

CELESTIALS

MOST STRIKING

MACON WEBSTER

Could you look and then forget
Those dancing eyes, that graceful tread?

PRETTIEST

BOBBIE PORTER

If Paris of old had his apple of gold,
It would go without question to Bobbie.

CELLANUS

MOST MUSICAL

MARGARET WRIGHT

Music! Then we pause to hear
Such strains that would hold Pan in fear
Of losing all his laurels.

MOST ATHLETIC

FRANCES HARDY

We've heard that the home is the place
for our sex,
But the athletic field looks good to Hex.

That Extra Hour

There is something in this college
That I've heard a lot about;
I have hunted for it often,
But I've never found it out.

True, it must be on the campus,
For the faculty says so;
But its place of habitation
I, for one, do not yet know.

It is called That Hour of Leisure.
"When your lessons all are done,
And a time reserved for sleeping,
Or for gym, or having fun.

There will come a time," they tell us,
"When you've not a thing to do,
So I've planned a course of reading
That will be a help to you."

Oh, ye gods! a course of reading!
When we can not even find
Time for things we must attend to!
Surely, teachers all are blind.

Many are the things we'll master
When we find that phantom hour;
Many are the books, and learned,
That we then may all devour.

We'll improve in mind and manners;
We will grow in strength and power.
Do you ask us when we'll do it?
Why, just in that extra hour.

F. E. W.

Sorrows of Youth

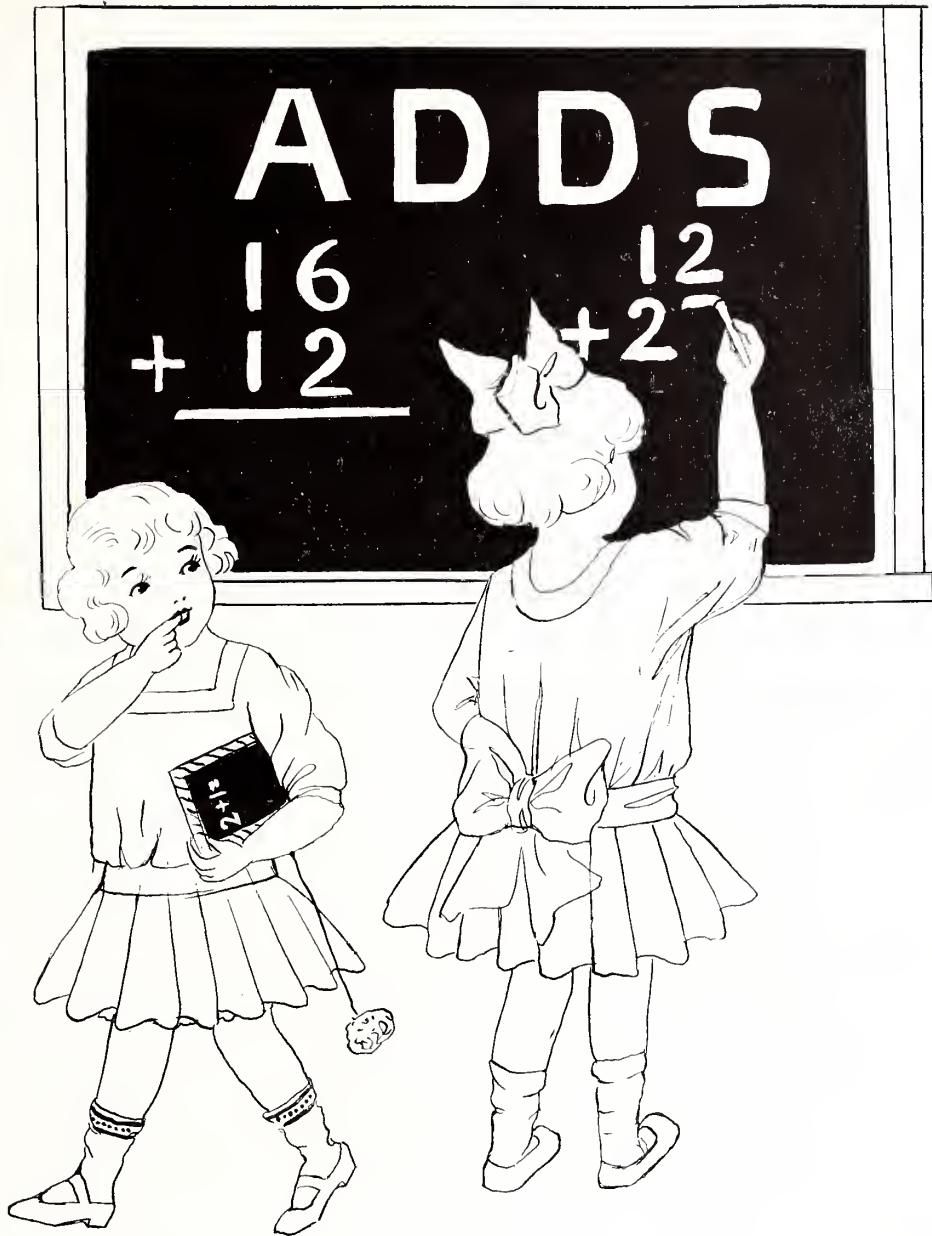

"Don't cry, little Freshman," and I patted her head;
"When you are so young, and life stretches ahead."
"I weep for Dr. Lipscomb, whose faith I must shatter,
Whose hopes I must break, whose illusions must scatter.
He thinks Latin is living," she bowed low her head,
"And I feel I must tell him it really is dead."

"Don't cry, little Freshman," and I mopped her red eyes;
"Look at the blue spaces and not the dark skies."
"I weep over Mr. Malone, whom I thought was so deep,
So serious about all the thoughts we must reap.
Yet he must be light headed," she caught her sad heart,
"For he smiles a broad grin in the most serious part."

"Don't cry, little Freshman," and I smoothed down her hair;
"The sun will still shine, and the world still is fair."
"Dr. Laubscher," she sighed, "whom I thought so intent,
His whole thought absorbed on what French gutturals meant.
When the real story is known, what truth do I find
But that French's a poor second in his heart and mind!"

THE END

When You Return to R.-M. W. C.

You will doubtless need many things to make your room cozy and homelike. Guggenheimer's has always been the favorite shopping place of the great majority of College Girls. Here you will find beautiful room furnishings specially selected for school needs. Dainty curtains, attractive cretonnes, drapery materials, special electric lamps for study, useful shirtwaist boxes, comfortable willow chairs and tables, at very moderate prices. It will be a pleasure to show you these things, whether you buy or not.

When at Home Shop by Mail

If you fail to find what you want in your home town, write to Guggenheimer. The return mail will bring the indispensable item in an incredibly short time. Any purchase found, upon examination, not entirely satisfactory, may be returned for exchange or credit, or, if preferred, money will be refunded. Write for our "Store News," an interesting monthly publication of Styles and Values.

Telling the Cook.

"Girls who marry men wealthy enough to hire a cook ought to know something about cooking, so they can tell the cook how they want things."

After saying that, Henry T. Finck, the eminent musical critic and author, adds:

"I bless the stars that I have a wife who can tell what's wrong and how to mend it."

One of the beauties of the

dish is that it never has to be mended, no matter who made it. Cook or no cook, the dish of Jell-O is never wrong.

There are seven pure fruit flavors of Jell-O: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate. Each 10 cents at any grocer's.

Little folders in Jell-O packages contain all the instructions anyone needs in making the "made-in-a-minute" Jell-O dainties, but we shall be glad to send you the fine new Jell-O Book if you will favor us with your address.
